

THE SENIOR PAGE

Dear Seniors:

Since wartime economies made impossible the publication of the Raconteur, college yearbook, for 1943, The Trail Blazer has dedicated this page of the last issue of the paper for the quarter to you—in recognition of your accomplishments and activities on the Morehead State Teachers College campus during your years as students here.

The Trail Blazer is proud to pay tribute to you, our friends and classmates, who will soon receive your diplomas as evidence of work well done at this college. We wish that we might more aptly express to you our admiration for your conduct, your contributions to the school's welfare, and the good examples you have been for us. Suffice it to say that we believe that you have been real credits to Morehead State Teachers College, and that we shall remember you on this campus for a long, long time.

Thank you for your co-operation in giving us your pictures, and lists of your activities for publication on this page. The activity lists appear complete as you submitted them to us.

So, to you, the seniors, The Trail Blazer extends its congratulations for your job well done. We wish you the best of luck in whatever field of endeavor you turn to from here, and we are confident that in the future you will bring even greater honors to Morehead State Teachers College.

—THE STAFF.

A WEEK OF THE WAR

Planned down on the plains and against the hills of northeastern Tunisia, the last remnants of the Axis armies in North Africa collapsed with stunning suddenness on May 12. The coup de grace was delivered after the ragged Afrika Korps and Italian satellite troops were pinned into two segments, with the larger isolated on the mountain and the smaller, surrounded in the Zaghouan area further west.

Surrender of both groups followed the execution of a brilliant maneuver by the British Eighth and First Armies. Sir Harold Alexander sent three divisions of the Eighth Army from the south Tunisian front to the sector west of Tunis where they joined the British First Army. The combined forces swept swiftly across the base of Cap Bon from Hammam Liff south to Hammamet, cutting the Axis forces in two. Paroled made a complete circuit of the peninsula and troops of the Sixth Armored division, pressing down from the north, effected a junction within the Eighth Army north of Enfidaville.

At the same time, French troops between Zaghouan and Sfax, Marie Du Zai kept up their attack and on May 12 enemy resistance in this area collapsed. General Von Arnim, commander in chief of the Axis forces in North Africa, was captured May 13. Marie Du Zai held 22,000 German troops in the area. Von Arnim was captured without a fight but released to fight for the Germans.

Early in the week, it became apparent that it would be impossible for the Axis to hold Dunkerque. For three days before the German Army in the area of Dunkerque and the surrounding waters to hammer Marsala and Catania in Sicily and Pantelleria Island, to prevent the bringing up of other reinforcements of evacuation transports. Nearly 300,000 German soldiers, more than 100,000 fighters, smashed at Marsala, starting fire visible from the African coast. Other air attacks in Sicily were reported earlier in the week by 400 American planes.

The blockade of the Axis armies was completed by naval forces off Cap Bon. Intense naval activity prevailed off the coast all week, supplemented by the capture of enemy transports off Cap Bon. One detachment of light naval vessels sailed from the Gulf of Tunis and among their prisoners took a German general officer who was seeking to escape.

In all, 150,000 Axis troops were captured. The masses of equipment also fell into Allied hands. On May 12, a communication issued at Allied Headquarters reported that 1,600 guns, 250 tanks and many thousands of motor vehicles had been rounded up by Allied troops.

From General MacArthur's headquarters, there came word that while bad weather restricted operations in the New Guinea theater of action, three patrol planes had taken place on the jungle trails between Salamaua and Milne Bay.

and Mubo. An Allied attachment — part of the forces working to capture the New Guinea northeast coast — battled its way out of an attempted Japanese encirclement 12 miles east of Salamaua and resumed contact with its main force. Other fighting occurred near Koniakum, where a Japanese patrol was ambushed, and near an Allied-held village five miles from Salamaua.

Early in the week, American dive bombers and torpedo planes scored hits on Japanese anti-aircraft positions in the Munda area. American planes also bombed Japanese positions on the southwest coast of Kolombangara Island in the Central Solomon. On the morning of May 11, a group of Army flying fortresses bombed Japanese installations at Kaituli on Bougainville and at Shortland Island. Later an attack was made on Tokusa Bay on Santa Isabel Island. These are all strategic Japanese-held positions, all existing threat to all Allied forces in the southwest Pacific.

During the week, the Navy reported that the Japanese submarine had torpedoed 10 Japanese vessels in the attack, in the course of accumulating its bag, the submarine mined one ship at which it fired, later, however, it got two ships with one salvo.
